

Getting on the bus to go home

When it is time to go home, I take the bus.

When the day is over, I get my belongings and walk to the breezeway and out to my bus.

Sometimes other kids may get to the bus first.

Just like in line, when I am walking to my classes, I do not always have to be first.

If I am first, or if I am last, it does not matter.

I will get to where I need to be and not miss out on anything.

Being first in line can be fun, but I know that I do not always have to be first; it is important for me to take turns.

If I am not first to get on the bus, I know that it is important for me to be safe.

This means that I will wait for my turn to get on.

I will stand on my feet and quietly walk up the stairs when it is my turn.

If I lay down on the ground or scream, it can put both me and other children in danger.

When I am ready to go home I ride the bus.

I do not always have to be first, but I do always have to be safe. I do this by standing on my feet and using a quiet voice.
